

Licks paws

First thing I suggest is giving him a bath in case he walked into something that is causing his feet to itch or be irritated. If continues it could be one or more of the following items.

Do not just assume behavior. Always weed out medical concerns.

1. has a bad tooth - make sure to check mouth and smell of bad breath
2. yeast infection between the toes. Check between the toes for what I describe as slime. The medication you use for ear infections you can use to clear up yeast between toes
3. has allergies - may need to look at the diet and if environmental allergies make sure his feet are washed down every night
4. side affect to medication - consult with your vet in lowering the dose and gradually working up to the full dose
5. comforting motion
